PROGRAM OVERVIEW

In today's fast-changing landscape, social-impact leaders must navigate complexity, shifting priorities, and systemic challenges. This certificate program helps leaders move beyond reactive approaches to embrace innovation as a pathway to meaningful, dignity-driven change. Designed for professionals in public, nonprofit, and social-enterprise sectors, the course bridges theory and practice. Participants will engage with entrepreneurial thinking, systems- and complexity-approaches, and hands-on tools from the frontlines of social innovation. Interactive case studies and design-based learning help apply new strategies in real time. More than a training, this is a strategic reset offering space to reflect, re-imagine, and lead with purpose. Participants leave with practical tools, a peer network, and the capacity to lead transformative change in their communities. The program includes a minimum of 21 academic hours through two full days in-person and two virtual sessions.

OUTCOMES

- Gain clear language for the typologies, concepts, and methodologies that underpin social innovation.
- Tools for designing, testing, and managing entrepreneurial solutions.
- Develop an innovation mindset.
- Introduce structured innovation practices into your organization and professional network.
- Connect and collaborate with other leaders.
- Design relational approaches that fit public- and social-service contexts.

Shift systems and build cultures of safety and dignity

Forge is bringing innovation and systems thinking to the social health field. The Certificate in Innovation, Leadership, & Social Impact program is designed for practitioners working to address social health issues, mental health, recovery, domestic violence, or sexual violence.

Most social innovation training focuses on disruption or theoretical information, not the tools leaders need to shift systems or build cultures of safety and dignity. Social innovation requires getting buy-in, leveraging networks, and finding sustainable paths forward. This certificate is about leading change in real situations where it's messy and complicated - and where making change matters to people, in community, and civic life.
